WAS ARRESTED ON GAMBLING CHARGE

Morris Williams of Gettysburg Placed in Atlantic City Jail on Charge of Gambling. Had been Used as Witness.

Morris Williams of this place was arrested in Atlantic City on Thursday charged with gambling. He was unable to furnish bail and was committed to the city jail.

Williams appeared at police station in Atlantic City on Wednesday and obtained warrants for the arrest of "Trippie" Collins, a well known gambling house proprietor, and for a man named "Lukens." He accused Collins and Lukens of the robbery of $100 in money and a diamond pin.

Later he asked that the case against Lukens be dropped, as he did not believe Lukens was concerned in the theft.

At two o'clock Thursday morning police raided the Collins gambling house in Georgia Avenue. Twenty five men were there and they fled in a panic. The first man out carried away the window sash and all. Six or eight men, in their hurry, got wedged together in a narrow passage way and several were slightly hurt. Five were arrested, among them "Trippie" Collins.

Collins was charged with larceny and keeping the gambling house. Williams took the witness stand Thursday morning, told the whole story about his gambling in the place and about the loss of the diamond and the money, and on his testimony Collins was held to the grand jury.

Thursday afternoon, when Collins was brought up again for keeping a gambling house, Williams was brought in as the star witness, and immediately refused to testify.

Indignant at this, Assistant County Prosecutor Schwinghammer ordered the arrest of Williams himself and he was charged with gambling on his own evidence taken in the morning. After he had been grilled by Schwinghammer he was himself held to court in $200, and, not being able to furnish bail, is now in the city jail, where he will be held while a thorough investigation is made.

Williams gave Gettysburg as his home and mining engineer as his profession.

ORRTANNA

Orrtanna, July 26—John Beaver, of Shippensburg, is circulating among friends in and about town for a few days.

Thieves entered the house of Mervin Herring Saturday night when all were absent and ransacked the entire house going from the cellar to the garret, leaving things all out of order. Some fine wine and $59 were taken. The same night a window screen was taken out of E. J. Naugle's store and many articles were missed, the chief loss being candy.

Walter Sloat, who has been under the doctor's care for the last few days is improving rapidly.

J. C. Baumgardner has had an automobile garage built this week. L. F. Mickle contractor.

Miss Beulah Crone is spending the week with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Freed, near Hilltown.

The Orrtanna base ball team played Mt. Carmel Saturday at the latter place. Score 7 to 4 in favor of Mt. Carmel. The festival held at Mt. Carmel Saturday night amounted to $54.69, the proceeds for the benefit of the church at that place.

AVIATOR AND AIRSHIP HERE

James B. McCalley and his Curtiss Bi-plane Arrive in Gettysburg. Weather not likely to Interfere with Flights.

James B. McCalley, the young aviator who will fly here on Sunday, is now in Gettysburg. His machine, a new Curtiss bi-plane, arrived during the day and will be set up in the Warner field where the flights will take place.

Mr. McCalley has just recently come from a stay of several weeks in the Harrisburg hospital where he was recovering from injuries sustained in a seventy foot fall. His machine was badly damaged and is now being rebuilt so that he will use another in his Gettysburg flying. Mr. McCalley said this morning.

"I expect to do some spectacular work here and have so promised Governor Tener. Several years ago people were satisfied to see an aviator go up, make several circles and come down. Now, however, it is different. They want something more exciting and I propose to give it to them."

"I will go up if the weather is at all favorable. Rain will not interfere for I was up in the rain at Hammondsport, New York, just this last Tuesday. A steady wind is not specially dangerous and I have been up when it has blown as high as twenty seven miles an hour which is really a gale. It is the short puffy wind that causes trouble, the wind on which you cannot rely and which blows fiercely one minute and the next has almost subsided."

"It has been my policy never to disappoint a crowd if I could go up without encountering some unreasonable risk. When a man sees ten or fifteen thousand persons anxiously waiting to see a flight he does not like to disappoint them and of course, I feel that it is worth taking some risk to satisfy such a crowd. We expect that many here on Sunday."

Mr. McCalley is an unassuming young man and like most of the successful aviators not given to talking of his own exploits. He has been here but a few hours but has made many friends in Gettysburg. It is possible that a few trial flights may be made Saturday in order to test out the machine. In flying over the campus on Sunday he will drop oranges to show how bombs could be thrown from airships in time of war.

YOUNG SOLDIERS IN WAR GAME

Many Sham Battles on Hills Surrounding Gettysburg. Lively Cavalry Fight South of Town. Other News in Camp.

Camp Edwin S. Stuart has been a busy place for the past thirty six hours with numerous sham battles in which blank cartridges were freely used and the rattle of musketry fire could be heard frequently during the engagements.

Perhaps the most interesting engagement of the week up to this time occurred near Little Round Top on Thursday when three troops of cavalry, the Second City Troop, Troops A and G took up a patrolling position extending from Rock Creek to Marsh Creek. The First City Troop approached to ascertain their strength and were soon either captured or "killed." One of the attacking party was "shot" from a bay stack, others were caught in ambush and the entire party taken back to camp by their captors.

The First, Second and Third regiments had their own sham battles and there were a number of exciting charges. Battery B has been drilling every day but trouble in managing their horses has prevented the battery being used in any maneuvers up to this time.

The Engineers did some remarkable work on Thursday when they constructed a bridge out of trees which they had felled. The Engineers carry nothing but axes, saws and rope yet they built a bridge sufficiently large to carry an army. After the bridge was built they made all preparations to blow it up with dynamite. A mass of barbed wire was erected between posts to halt the progress of an attacking army while trenches were constructed to shed both rifle and artillery fire. The men were thoroughly protected both from direct and "enfilading" fire and the whole thoroughly explained by Captain Ottwell U. S. A.

Governor Tener celebrated his forty ninth birthday in camp by visiting many of the commands and watching them at work. In the evening a complimentary dinner was given him at headquarters. A large birthday cake was one of the features. The Fourteenth regiment band played at headquarters in the evening.

TROLLEY TRACKS REPAIRED

An erroneous impression that the local trolley line is unsafe is being circulated. THREE SCORE DEAD IN FLOODS

Raging Streams Spread Death and Desolation.

HUNDREDS ARE HOMELESS

Frenzied Inhabitants Make Mad Rush For Safety on Mountains — Many Buildings Wrecked.

Pittsburgh, Pa., July 26.—Over sixty lives were claimed Wednesday by the floods and cloudbursts in southwestern Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and hundreds of homes and business houses were destroyed. Uniontown, Pa., leads the list of known dead with fifteen.

At Wheeling, W. Va., three were drowned; at Lemont, Pa., four were drowned; at Ellenswood, Pa., three persons were drowned, and thirty-six lives are reported to have been lost in other towns of the two states.

Uniontown, Lemont, Mount Braddock, Connellsville and Dunbar, Pa., were inundated. In Turtle Creek Valley the damage is enormous and scores of families are homeless in the upper Youghiogheny Valley.

Railroad traffic through a great territory is demoralized, especially as to Uniontown, where the tracks of two railroads were torn from their foundations. Several towns are without railroad, mail, telephone and telegraph connections. From West Virginia cities no reports can be obtained, because telegraph wires are down. It will be several weeks before the complete loss of life is known.

Hundreds of families deserting their homes in a mad rush for safety on the mountain sides sought shelter beneath improvised shacks and tents, toward the construction of which every available piece of debris was turned to account. Shivering women and children gazed over a scene of desolation in the upper Youghiogheny Valley, and as the waters receded upturned dwellings, shattered buildings and crushed piles of mortar were held in a mass by a railroad bridge or trestle.

Heavy rocks have been split, heavy railroad iron has been lifted from almost solid beds and dropped into rivers, while on all sides deep scars mark the surface of the earth where the crowding waters have made new courses for themselves.

Dunbar, near Connellsville, was inundated. The waters raged through the main streets, upsetting massive structures and endangering the lives of hundreds. A cloudburst was the cause, although it is thought the dam broke. The Turtle Creek Valley was visited by a disastrous flood, and the damage is enormous. Crops were blotted from the earth.

Railroad traffic through a great territory is demoralized. Several railroad bridges were torn from foundations and hurled into the waters.

At Evans Station, three miles north of Uniontown, Pa., a cloudburst sent waters raging into the mouth of the Superba No. 2 mines. Fourteen men were drowned like rats in a trap, while thirty-seven others had miraculous escapes from a similar death. A few miles away at Lemont mine No. 2 three other men are reported to have drowned in like fashion.

An American miner employed at the Superba mine, who spent most of the night at the shaft of the Lemont No. 1, came away with information that no hope longer is entertained of the survival of Peter Evans, a pumper; John Scanlon, laborer, and an unknown foreigner in the Lemont. This would bring the total list of dead up to eighteen. Those who have penetrated the Superba mine come out with reports of almost indescribable ruin within the workings caused by the awful force of the rushing waters.

"It looks in there as if there had been an explosion of terrific force," said Frank Taggart, who accompanied the foreman, Ganier, in stepping off the distance between the mine mouth and the point where the water choked the heading. "The water simply ripped up the tracks and twisted and bent the rails in all sorts of shapes. In some places forming an almost impossible barrier to our further entry. Supports were torn out, and until we came to water that filled the heading to the roof formed barricades almost to the roof."

The Superba No. 2 is a slope mine. It is a five foot vein, the top lying only about thirty feet under the earth's surface. The territory is bottom land, and when the flood came on Wednesday in Cool Spring creek the wide expanse of low land was transformed into a veritable lake, through which the Cool Spring channel formed a madly rushing race. The tremendous weight of this body of water found the surface weak spots and the thirty foot earth crust covering the old workings broke through in five widely scattered points.

These yawning craters mutely told the cause of the disaster. It was hazardous to approach within many feet of the huge pits in the earth's surface. The largest of these was within 100 feet of the slope entry of the mine. It is a hole twenty feet in diameter, into which hay, timbers, rails and other obstructions had been hurled in the mad frenzy of relatives of the miners known to be in the workings when the first alarm of danger was seen. Their efforts to dam up the openings were most feeble in contest with the water.

MISS HELEN GOULD DEFENDS OLD MAIDS

Pastor's Slurs Answered by Bachelor Girl.

Grand Junction, Colo., July 26.—When Rev. Elmer F. Huffner, just resigned as pastor of the First Christian church, delivered a sermon recently advocating exile of old maids to a barren island as waste humanity, he expected local resentment, but he hardly looked to find himself at issue with Miss Helen Gould.

In a letter just received in Grand Junction Miss Gould said that many preachers would be without work and without wives and homes were it not for the old maids.

CHAUFFEUR CONFESSES

Murder Car Driver Turns State's Evidence.

LIEUT. BECKER TO TESTIFY

He Will Waive Immunity and Appear Before the Grand Jury on Tuesday.

New York, July 26.—William Shapiro, the chauffeur who drove the gray touring car in which the assassins of Herman Rosenthal rode to the scene of the crime and escaped after the murder, turned state's evidence and revealed to the district attorney and Deputy Police Commissioner Dougherty all he knows about the case.

The arrangement for a complete confession by Shapiro was made through his counsel, Aaron J. Levy. Mr. Levy offered Shapiro's testimony to the district attorney under conditions guaranteeing Shapiro from prosecution a week ago. The district attorney held off from the proposition because he was not satisfied with the line of testimony displayed by Levy.

It is understood that Shapiro, in order to make good the plan by which he was allowed to confess, came forward with information of importance supplementing that which he had already given to the authorities. At any rate Shapiro has officially confessed, and the district attorney hopes his action will be the opening wedge to a solution of the men who killed Rosenthal and the men who financed the killing.

Here is one of the most interesting details of the cleverly dovetailed movements of the plotters. The men that Shapiro drove from the Metropole after the revolver had settled forever the question as to whether the gambler would inform further were not the same men, with one exception, that Shapiro drove to the hotel. The exception was the mysterious figure that accompanied Schepps and Vallon to the Considine resort. He was one of the men who fired a bullet into Rosenthal's head, and he stroled back to the gray car with a smoking pistol in his hand. As for the other murderers, Shapiro says, they squirmed and twisted away to safety through the shadows and the crowds.

Lieutenant Charles A. Becker, with his attorney, John W. Hart, appeared at the criminal courts building and announced his willingness to go before the grand jury, waiving his immunity rights, and to answer any questions that might be put by the district attorney or members of the grand jury.

Becker did not appear at the time appointed by the district attorney in his invitation to the three heads of the so-called "gambling squads," and because of his tardiness the grand jury had adjourned before he could be heard. He was instructed to return next Tuesday, when he will be submitted to an examination regarding his dealings with Herman Rosenthal.

Lieutenants Dominick Reilly and Daniel Costigan, who, with Becker, were in charge of the squads detailed to the raiding of gambling houses, appeared at the district attorney's office. Costigan was taken before the grand jury and testified at length in a general way as to gambling conditions in New York, the methods of obtaining evidence and the conduct of the police squads assigned to look after gambling houses and poolrooms. He was the only witness heard, Reilly being excused until Monday.

DEAD BABE ON TABLE WHILE PARENTS EAT

Whisky Flasks Found Beside Body of Child.

Philadelphia, July 26.—The body of two-weeks-old Francis Brown, who died Tuesday, was found lying on a table in the home of the parents, James and Mary Ellen Brown, at 514 Kater street, by the police.

It had lain there, the parents said, since its death. Over it was spread a cheap curtain that evidently had been taken down from a window. Beside it were two whisky flasks that were empty and another flask that was half filled. The only furniture in the room except the table were three chairs.

The Browns and a woman boarder, whose speech was so inarticulate that the police could not understand her name when she pronounced it, were in the house. They said they had no money to bury the child, and had placed it on the table because it was the only place they could think of to put it. While it was there the three had eaten and drunk at the table, they said.

Apparently no attention had been paid to the body since its death. The mother said she had tried to collect some money for its burial, but had not succeeded.

Brown had $1.45 in his pockets when the policeman called on him, the balance left from the sale of some furniture, he said. The mother said the money was to have been used for medical attention for the child, but later admitted that no doctor had been called in since the child was born. The money, she said, had gone for drink and food.

A pair of pearl screw earrings, valued at $10,000, is in the list of missing articles, together with a diamond necklace. Other articles are a diamond tiara, a diamond stomacher, diamond pins and rings, a pearl ring and a watch set with diamonds.

SENATE PASSES WOOL BILL

Lippitt-Penrose Act Adopted by Vote of 34 to 32.

DEFEAT CUMMINS SUBSTITUTE

It Takes the Place of the Democratic Measure Passed by the House of Representatives.

Washington, July 26.—The compromise wool tariff revision bill, introduced by Senator Penrose, passed the senate by a vote of 34 to 32.

It was adopted as a substitute for the Democratic bill prepared by the house of representatives, and after a substitute offered by Senator Cummins had been defeated.

The Cummins substitute wool tariff bill, which represented the views of many of the progressive senators, was defeated by an overwhelming majority when it came to a vote. Practically all progressives voted for it.

The measure was defeated, 57 to 14. The senators supporting it were Borah, Bourne, Bristow, Clapp, Crawford, Cummins, Gronna, Jones, Kenyon, La Follette, Nelson, Poindexter, Townsend and Works.

All Democrats and the rest of the Republicans voted against the Cummins bill. The defeat of this substitute had been anticipated, and the knowledge that a compromise measure had been prepared by the Republican leaders, to be offered as soon as the Cummins bill was disposed of, aided in preventing the so-called regular Republicans from supporting the Cummins bill.

Senator Penrose, acting on behalf of the finance committee, offered the Republican substitute as soon as the Cummins amendment had been voted down. It was the bill that had been prepared by Senator Lippitt, of Rhode Island, and which had been circulated among the Republican members.

The Lippitt-Penrose bill was received in the spirit of surprise by the Democratic side, although the Democratic leaders were aware that it would be presented as a counter move to their bill for a sweeping reduction of the woolen tariff.

Demands were made from the Democratic side for more time to examine the measure, and the Republican members of the finance committee were criticised for submitting a measure that the senate did not have time to study.

Senator Cummins made a formal statement as to the effect the new bill would have if adopted. He said it would make many important reductions in the present tariff rates on wool and woolen products. On blankets, he said, the reduction would be from 12 per cent to 24 per cent on the higher grades, and almost 50 per cent on the cheaper grades, which are valued at from 30 to 40 cents a pound. The tariff on yarns, said Senator Cummins, would be cut from 8 per cent to 45 per cent, the actual reduction depending upon the varying conditions in the market. In the same way the duties on wool tops would be reduced from 35 per cent to 50 per cent.

FOR SEPARATE ELECTORS

Maryland Progressives Decide For Separate Tickets.

Baltimore, Md., July 26.—A mass convention called by the Roosevelt adherents of Maryland met here, elected delegates to the National Progressive convention in Chicago, Aug. 5, and decided for separate electoral tickets in Maryland.

The decision for two sets of electors was embodied in the platform adopted by a viva voce vote after some discussion in which the delegates from western Maryland opposed the provisions by which proposed electors on the Progressive ticket must resign from the regular ticket.

Colonel E. C. Carington, Charles R. Schirm, J. Stuart McDonald and Joseph W. Wolfinger were named as national delegates at large and twelve district delegates, embracing all six of the congressional districts, were selected—the delegates having had a vote each.

Peary's Arctic Ship Sold.

New York, July 26.—Peary's Arctic ship, the Roosevelt, was sold under the hammer for $35,200, to H. E. J. McDermott, representing a concern the name of which he declined to give. The disposal of the ship was due to the death of John A. Buckle. Mr. A. Buckle is believed to have paid $10,000 for the Roosevelt after her return from the Arctic expedition. Her original cost was $125,000.

Three Men Die in Wreck.

Stonington, Conn., July 26.—Three men were killed and four injured in the sideswiping of a freight train by the eastbound Adams Express train at the Stonington Junction yards on the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad. All the victims were train men.

Fiery Death to Save Trinkets.

Axetion, Pa., July 26.—Constantin Naturl, fifteen years old, made two trips into her burning home to save trinkets, and when she returned a third time into the flames she was burned to death. Her mother then threw her into the Monongahela river, but was rescued.

Keziah Coffin

By Joseph C. Lincoln

Author of "Cy Whittaker's Place," "Cap's Bri," Etc.

Illustrations by Elsworth Young

(Copyright, 1912, by J. C. Lincoln & Company)

"No, no! I ain't loony. I want to make a proposal to you. I want to see if you won't marry me. I'm sick of Lavinia. Let's you and me settle down together. I could have some peace then. And I think a whole lot of you, too," he added, apparently as an afterthought. "Don't stop to argue, Keziah. I've got 'most fifteen hundred dollars in the bank. Lavinia keeps the pass book in her bureau, but you could get it from her. I own my house. I'm a man of good character. You're poor, but I don't let that stand in the way. Anyhow, you're a first-rate housekeeper. And I really do think an awful lot of you."

Mrs. Coffin stepped no farther in the direction of the kitchen. Instead, she strode toward the rickety chair and its occupant. Kyan grasped the pipe with both hands.

"You poor—miserable—impudent—" began the lady.

"Why, Keziah, don't you want to?" He spoke as if the possibility of a refusal had never entered his mind. "I called you'd be glad. You wouldn't have to go away then, nor—My soul and body! some one's knockin' at the door! And this dummed pipe's fetched loose!"

The last sentence was a smothered shriek. Keziah heeded not. Neither did she heed the knock at the door. Her hands were opening and closing convulsively.

"Be glad!" she repeated. "Glad to marry a good-for-nothin' sand-peep like you! You sassy—Get down off that chair and out of this house! Get down this minute!"

"I can't! This stovepipe's loose, I tell you. Be reasonable, Keziah. Do—don't you touch me! I'll fall if you do. Please, Keziah!—O Lord! I knew it. Lavinia!"

The door opened. On the threshold, arms akimbo and lips set tight, stood Lavinia Pepper. Her brother's knees gave way; in their collapse they struck the chair back; the rickety leg wobbled. Kyan grasped at the pipe to save himself and, the next moment, chair, sections of stovepipe, and Mr. Pepper disappeared with a mighty crash behind the high-boy. A cloud of soot arose and obscured the view.

Keziah, too indignant even to laugh, glared at the wreck. In the doorway of the kitchen Grace Van Horne, hammer in hand, leaned against the jamb, her handkerchief at her mouth and tears in her eyes. Lavinia, majestic and rigid, dominated the scene. From behind the high-boy came coughs, sneezes and emphatic ejaculations.

Miss Pepper was the first to speak. "Abishai Pepper," she commanded, "come out of that this minute."

There was a sound of scrambling. More soot floated in the air. Then around the corner of the high-boy appeared Mr. Pepper, crawling on his hands and knees. His hair was streaked with black; his shirt front and collar and shirt sleeves were spotted and smeared with black; and from his blackened cheeks his red whiskers flamed like the last glowing embers in a fire-scarred ruin.

"I was just tryin' to help Keziah take down her stovepipe," he explained. "You see, she didn't have no man to—"

"Yes, I see. Well, I judge you got it down. Now you go out to the sink and wash your face. Heavens and earth! Look at them clothes!"

"I do hope you didn't hurt yourself,

Abishai," said the sympathetic Keziah. Then, as remembrance of what had led to the upset came to her, she added: "Though I will say 'twas your own fault and nobody else's."

Lavinia whirled on her.

"Dear me! Ain't we innocent! We've got plenty of money, we have. Widowers with property ain't no attraction to us. Everybody knows that—oh, yes! And they never talk of such a thing—oh, no! Folks don't say that—that—Well," with a snarl in the direction of the kitchen, "are you anywhere nigh clean yet? Get your coat and hat on and come home with me."

She jerked her brother into the blue coat, jammed the tail hat down upon his head, and, seizing him by the arm, stalked to the door.

"Good day, marm," she said. "I do hope the next widower you get to take down your stovepipe—yes, indeed! ha! ha!—I hope you'll have better luck with him. Though I don't know who 'twould be; there ain't no more idiots in town that I know of. Good day, and thank you kindly for your attentions to our family."

Keziah turned from the door she had closed behind her visitor.

"Well!" she ejaculated. "Well!" Steps, measured, dignified steps, sounded on the walk. From without came a "Hum—ha!" a portentous combination of cough and grunt. Grace dodged back from the window and hastily began donning her hat and jacket.

"It's Cap'n Elkanah," she whispered. "I must go. This seems to be your busy morning, Aunt Keziah. I—here she choked again—really, I didn't know you were so popular."

Keziah opened the door. Captain Elkanah Daniels, prosperous, pompous and unbending, crossed the threshold. "Richman in the village, retired shipowner, pillar of the Regular church and leading member of its parish committee, Captain Elkanah looked the part. He removed his hat, cleared his throat behind his black stock, and spoke with impressive deliberation.

"Keziah," he said, "Keziah, I came to see you on a somewhat important matter. I have a proposal I wish to make you."

He must have been surprised at the effect of his words. Keziah's face was a picture, a crimson picture of paralyzed amazement. As for Miss Van Horne, that young lady gave vent to what her friend described afterwards as a "squel," and bolted out of the door and into the grateful seclusion of the fog.

"Get Down Off That Chair!"

CHAPTER II.

In Which Keziah Unearths a Prowler.

The fog was cruel to the gossips of Trumet that day. Mrs. Didama Rogers, who lived all alone, except for the society of three cats, a canary, and a white poodle named "Bunch," in the little house next to Captain Elkanah's establishment, never entirely recovered from the chagrin and disappointment caused by that provoking mist.

The fog prevented Mrs. Rogers' noting the entrance of Mr. Pepper at the Coffin front gate. Also his exit, under sisterly arrest. It shut from her view the majestic approach of Captain Elkanah Daniels and Grace's flight, her face dimpled with smiles and breaking into laughter at frequent intervals. For a young lady, supposed to be a devout Come-Outter, to hurry along the main road, a handkerchief at her mouth and her eyes sparkling with fun, was a circumstance calculated to furnish material for enjoyable scandal. And Didama missed it.

Other happenings she missed, also. Not knowing of Captain Daniel's call upon Keziah, she was deprived of the pleasure of wonder at the length of his stay. She did not see him, in company with Mrs. Coffin, go down the road in the opposite direction from that taken by Grace. Nor their return and parting at the gate, two hours later. It was three o'clock in the afternoon before a visitor came again to the Coffin front gate, entered the yard and rapped at the side door.

Keziah opened the door.

"Halloa!" she exclaimed. "Back, are you? I begun to think you'd been scared away for good."

Grace laughed as she entered.

"Well, auntie," she said, "I don't wonder you thought I was scared. Truly, I didn't think it was proper for me to stay. First Kyan and then Cap'n Elkanah, and both of them expressing their wishes to see you alone so—er—pointedly. I thought it was time for me to go. Surely, you give me credit for a little delicacy."

"Grace Van Horne! there's born fools enough in this town without your tryin' to be one. Grace, I ain't goin' to leave Trumet, not for the present, anyhow. I've got a way of earnin' my livin' right here. I'm goin' to keep house for the new minister."

The girl turned, her hat in her hand.

"Oh!" she cried in utter astonishment.

Keziah nodded. "Yes," she affirmed. "That was what Elkanah's proposal amounted to. Ha, ha! Deary me! When he said 'proposal,' I own up for a minute I didn't know what was comin'." After Kyan I was prepared for 'most anything. But he told me that Luray Phelps, who the parish committee had counted on to keep house for Mr. Ellery, had sent word her sister was sick and couldn't be left, and that somebody must be hired right off 'cause the minister's expected by day after tomorrow's coach. And the cap'n was made a delegate to come and see me about it. Come he did, and we settled it. I went down to the parsonage with him before dinner and looked the place over. There's an awful lot of sweepin' and dustin' to be done afore it's fit for a body to live in."

Grace extended her hand.

"Well, Aunt Keziah," she said, "I'm ever and ever so glad for you. I s'pose you didn't want to leave Trumet and I'm sure everyone will be delighted when they learn that you're going to stay."

"Humph! that includes Lavinia Pepper, of course. I call Lavinia's delight won't keep her up nights. But I guess I can stand it if she can. Now, Grace, what is it? You ain't real pleased? Why not?"

The girl hesitated.

"Auntie," she said, "I'm selfish, I guess. I'm glad for your sake; you mustn't think I'm not. But I almost wish you were going to do something else. You are going to live in the Regular parsonage and keep house for, of all persons, a Regular minister. Why, so far as my feeling you is concerned, you might as well be in China. You know Uncle Eben."

Keziah nodded understandingly.

"Yes," she said, "I know him. Eben Hammond thinks that parsonage is the presence chamber of the Evil One, I presume likely. But, Grace, you mustn't blame me, and if you don't call I'll know why and I shan't blame you. We'll see each other once in a while; I'll take care of that."

The packing took about an hour. When it was finished, the carpet rolled up, and the last piece of linen placed in the old trunk, Keziah turned to her guest.

"Now, Gracie," she said, "I feel as though I ought to go to the parsonage. I can't do much more'n look at the cobwebs tonight, but tomorrow those spiders had better put on their ascension robes. The end of the world's comin' for them, even though it missed fire for the Millerites when they had their doin's a few years ago. You can stay here and wait, if 'twon't be too lonesome. We'll have supper when I get back."

She threw a shawl over her shoulders, draped a white knitted "cloud" over her head, and took from a nail a key, attached by a strong cord to a block of wood eight inches long.

"Elkanah left the key with me," she observed. "No danger of losin' it, is there. Might as well lose a lumber yard."

They left the house and came out into the wet mist. Then, turning to the right, in the direction which Trumet, with unconscious irony, calls "downtown," they climbed the long slope where the main road mounts the outlying ridge of Cannon Hill, passed Captain Mayo's big house—the finest in Trumet, with the exception of the Daniels mansion—and descended into the hollow beyond. Here, at the corner where the "Lighthouse Lane" begins its winding way over the rolling knolls and dunes to the light and the fish shanties on the "ocean side," stood the plain, straight-up-and-down meeting house of the Regular society. Directly opposite was the little parsonage, also very straight up and down. Both were painted white with green blinds. This statement is superfluous to those who remember Cape architecture at this period; practically every building from Sandwich to Provincetown was white and green.

They entered the yard, through the gap in the white fence, and went around the house, past the dripping evergreens and the bare, wet lilac bushes, to the side door, the lock of which Keziah's key fitted. There was a lock on the front door, of course, but no one thought of meddling with that. That door had been opened but once during the late pastor's thirty-year tenantry. On the occasion of his funeral the mourners came and went, as was proper, by that solemn portal.

Mrs. Coffin thrust the key into the keyhole of the side door and essayed to turn it.

"Humph!" she muttered, twisting to no purpose; "I don't see why— This must be the right key, because— Well, I declare, if it ain't unlocked already! That's some of Cap'n Elkanah's doin's. For a critter as fussy and particular about some things, he's careless enough about others. Mercy we ain't had no tramps around here lately. Come in."

"Cheerful's a Tomb, Ain't It?" Was Mrs. Coffin's Comment.

She led the way into the dining room of the parsonage. Two of the blinds shading the windows of that apartment had been opened when she and Captain Daniels made their visit, and the dim gray light made the room more lonesome and forsaken in appearance than a deeper gloom could possibly have done. The black walnut extension table in the center, closed to its smallest dimensions because Parson Langley had eaten alone for so many years; the black walnut chairs set back against the wall at regular intervals; the rug carpet and braided mat—homemade donations from the ladies of the parish—on the green painted floor; the dolorous pictures on the walls; "Death of Washington,"

"Stoning of Stephen," and a still more deadly "fruit piece" committed in oils years ago by a now deceased boat painter. The blinds and a window being opened, more light entered the room. Grace glanced about it curiously.

"So this is going to be your new home now, Aunt Keziah," she observed. "How queer that seems."

"Um—h'm. Does seem queer, don't it? Must seem queer to you to be so near the headquarters of everything your uncle thinks is wicked. Smell of brimstone any, does it?" she asked with a smile.

She threw open another door. A room gloomy with black walnut and fragrant with camphor was dimly visible.

"Cheerful's a tomb, ain't it?" was Mrs. Coffin's comment. "Well, we'll get some light and air in here pretty soon. Here's the front hall and there's the front stairs. The parlor's off to the left. We won't bother with that yet a while. This little place in here is what Mr. Langley used to call his 'study.' Halloa! how this door sticks!"

The door did stick, and no amount of tugging could get it open, though Grace added her efforts to those of Keziah.

"Tain't locked," commented Mrs. Coffin, "cause there ain't any lock on it. I guess it's just swelled and stuck from the damp. Though it's odd, I don't remember—Oh, well! never mind. Let's sweeten up this settin' room a little. Open a window or two want to do anything before it gets dark. I'm goin' into the kitchen to get a broom."

She hurried out, returning in a moment or two with a broom and a most disgusted expression.

"How's a body goin' to sweep with that?" she demanded, exhibiting the frayed utensil, the business end of which was worn to a stub. "More like a shovel, enough sight. Well, there's pretty high dust enough for a shovel, so maybe this'll take off the top layer. S'pose I'll ever get this house fit for Mr. Ellery to live in before he comes? I wonder if he's a particular man?"

Grace, who was struggling with a refractory window, paused for breath.

"I'm sure I don't know," she replied. "I've never seen him."

"Nor I either. Sol was so bad the Sunday he preached that I couldn't go to meetin'." They say his sermon was fine; all about those who go down to the sea in ships. That's what got the parish committee, I guess; they're all old salts. I wonder if he's as fine-lookin' as they say?"

Miss Van Horne tossed her head. She was resting, prior to making another assault on the window.

"I don't care. I know he'll be a con-celled little snipet and I shall hate the sight of him. There! there! Auntie, you musn't mind me. I told you I was a selfish pig. But don't you ask me to like this precious minister of yours, because I shan't do it. He has no business to come and separate me from the best friend I've got. I'd tell him so if he was here—What was that?"

Both women looked at each other with startled faces. They listened intently.

"Why, wa'n't that funny!" whispered Keziah. "I thought I heard—"

"You did hear. So did I. What do you suppose—"

"S-s-s-h-h! It sounded from the front room somewhere. And yet there can't be anybody in there, because—My soul! there 'tis again. I'm goin' to find out."

She grasped the stubby broom by the handle and moved determinedly toward the front hall. Grace seized her by the arm.

"Don't you do it, auntie!" she whispered frantically. "Don't you do it! It may be a tramp."

"I don't care. Whoever or whatever it is, it has no business in this house, and I'll make that plain in a hurry. Just like as not it's a cat got in when Elkanah was here this forenoon. Don't be scared, Grace. Come right along."

The girl came along, but not with enthusiasm. They tiptoed through the dark, narrow hall and peered into the parlor. This apartment was dim and still and gloomy, as all proper parlors should be, but there was no sign of life.

Mrs. Coffin was glancing back down the hall with a strange expression on her face. Her grip upon the broom handle tightened.

"What is it?" pleaded the girl in an agonized whisper.

"Grace," was the low reply, "I've just remembered somethin'. That study door isn't stuck from the damp, because—well, because I remember now that it was open this mornin'."

Before her companion could fully grasp the import of this paralyzing fact, Keziah strode down the hall and seized the knob of the study door.

"Whoever you are in there," she commanded sternly, "open this door and come out this minute. Do you hear? I'm orderin' you to come out."

There was an instant of silence; then a voice from within made answer, a man's voice, and its tone indicated embarrassment.

"Madam," it said, "I—I am—I will be out in another minute. If you will just be patient—"

"Come out then!" snapped Keziah. "Come out! Patience! Of all the cheek! Why don't you come out now?"

"Well, to be frank, since you insist," snapped the voice, "I'm not fully dressed."

This was a staggerer. For once Keziah did not have a reply ready. She looked at Grace and the latter at her. Then, without words, they retreated to the sitting room.

Seaport Taking Its Old Place.

Aden, lately visited by King George, was a flourishing seaport centuries before the Christian era, and continued to thrive under the Roman Empire and after the rise of Mohammedan power in Asia Minor. The adoption of the Cape of Good Hope route to India, however, deprived it of its trade, and Aden sank to the squalid, insignificant village. Revival came in Early Victorian days when the overland route to India was reverted to. The British government saw the importance of Aden as guarding the passage to its eastern empire, and a number of outrages upon Englishmen by the Arabs led to the dispatch of an expedition which took the town in January, 1839. Since then its trade and population have increased until today Aden is a settlement over 70 square miles in extent and one of the most important of our "tin" ports.

SAVES DROWNING DAUGHTER

Falling into the mill race opposite her home, at Menges Mills, Gettysburg, the five year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Menges, would have been drowned on Tuesday, but for the efforts of her mother, who plunged in to the stream and rescued her when she had sunk for the third time.

The child, with her sister, Margaret, and some companions, had been playing along the race when she fell in. The sister's screams brought her mother, who arrived after the little girl had gone down. Mrs. Menges at once plunged into the water, which reached to her neck, and managed to grasp the child's body and get it to the bank, where a number of men had gathered. The child was soon resuscitated and shows no ill effects from her plunge.

Mr. Menges is the junior member of the firm of A. L. Menges and Bro., proprietors of the old Menges flour mill.
